The wolf is both a guardian and a guide, associating protection and responsibility.

On one hand, it communicates the idea of the pack and common action: wolves hunt, breed offspring and defend the territory in an integrated and coordinated way. On the other hand, the wolf is also related to literary and romantic loneliness and can represent individual strength.

The elephant is a universal symbol of strength and memory.

Depicted by Cracking Art in a "pushing" movement, it represents the importance of studying and understanding history by coming into direct physical contact with places and supporting them at the same time.

Cracking Art choses the Beagle to represent some of the values that it usually transmits in its creations: empathy, sociability, and playfulness.

Due to its sociability, size, and resistance, it has unfortunately become an ideal victim of animal testing. Representing it means paying homage to all animals that suffer the chilling methods man still adopts towards other living beings in order to chase its own well-being.

The rabbit expresses the idea of reproduction as a metaphor of plastic proliferation.

On one hand, the reproduction of these animals is possible thanks to a favorable habitat, but on the other, the abundance of food and absence of a natural enemy entails even greater environmental destruction. The rabbit is also associated with the dimension of illusion, magic and fairy tale.

The Cracking Art Cat was inspired by the European Cat, chosen explicitly for its diffusion, adaptability, and sociability.

The cat, willing to share the domestic space without ever relying completely on its roommate, teaches us that nature can never be completely domesticated and constricted to endure human's laws.

The bear is an animal that expresses both affinity and opposition to humans: it is a wild and ferocious animal but, as the teddy bear is a toy traditionally placed in children's cradles, it is also associated to a playful reality and the idea of protection.

The snail is one of the most meaningful animals for Cracking Art, thanks to its regenerative properties that symbolise rebirth and improvement.

The snail moves slowly and patiently, representing the importance of moving gradually and safely towards a target. The helix of its shell, which allows the snail to both hear and move, emphasizes the importance of the ability to listen and the utility of the upward movement which regulates the universe.

For centuries the goose has been worshipped as a symbol of life, rebirth and fertility - a guardian of humankind and a messenger of the Gods.

And it's precisely between its sacred image and its playful attributes that the Wild Goose of Cracking Art is placed. Elected as the senti nel of art and environment, it became an indomitable and silent guardian, committed to protecting the park with the same devotion with whom it broods its eggs.

The frog symbolizes metamorphosis, transformation and connection between water and land: it changes environments and adapts its appearance to new circumstances, transforming from a water-being into an amphibian. Its relationship with water also suggests the idea of regeneration and purification. In Italy, it is the most "onomatopoeic" animal: with sound ranging from "era-era," representing its stagnation, to "cracking-cracking," representing its movement.

The swallow is related to the awakening of nature and spring and so symbolizes rebirth and regeneration.

The swallow also stands for journey and freedom. Even though it is a wild animal, it builds nests on residential roofs, suggesting the idea of cohabitation with humans. The connection with human and with the domestic environment is further highlighted by the unusual choice of representing this animal standing up on the ground instead of flying.
